I. A New Method of SHORT-HAND; very different from, and far beyond any Thing that ever yet appear'd of that Nature. By $\mathcal{F}OHN$ BTROM, M. A. (lately Fellow of Trinity-College in Cambridge.) Mr. Byrom observing the great Use of Short-Hand to the Gentlemen of the Clergy, Law, or any Profession whatsoever, in Writing Sermons, common-placing, taking Tryals, copying Letters, &c. and that the best Methods yet known, whatever the Teachers of 'em may pretend, are very impersect and arbitrary, has undertaken to publish a new Method, wherein that useful Art is brought to a most beautiful persection; being in the easy, regular manner in which he has contriv'd it, a Thing of great Service upon many valuable Occasions.

With equal Application, any one may learn a great deal fooner to write much fater and plainer by this, than they possibly can do by any other Method, (tho' there are no arbitrary Marks in it at all) which other Methods, even the very latest, so much abound with.

Any Gentleman or Lady may quickly teach themselves by Mr. Byrom's Book without difficulty; if any should occur, he obliges himself to affift the Subscribers without any farther Consideration.

This Method is recommended by ROBERT SMITH, L. L. D. Professor of Astronomy in Cambridge, and F. R. S. and by RALPH LETCESTER, Esq, of Gray's-Inn; who say at the End of Mr. Byrom's Proposals that it answers the Character given of it therein, &c. And it has been shewn to several other good Judges, who have very much approv'd of it.

The Price is I Guinea, half to be paid down, and half upon Delivery. Subscriptions are taken in and Receipts given by Mr. Nicholson, at the Lobby in the House of Commons. Mr. Casley at the King's Library at Essex-House in Essex-street, near the Temple.
